Nationality: German

Languages spoken: English, German

Year of Birth: 1980

Thorsten Rall is the Global Head of Digital Strategy and Program Operations at Novartis. In this role, he and his team are responsible for defining strategic digital priority areas for Novartis globally and working with the organization in implementing those at scale to meaningfully impact Novartis's business objectives in innovation, commercial, and operations. In addition, he is driving a select number of global partnerships in the digital space aiming at positioning Novartis at the forefront in future healthcare settings. He is further setting the agenda for continuously refining the operating model of Novartis in the digital space. In this, Thorsten is working closely with the Chief Digital Officer of Novartis, Bertrand Bodson. Thorsten joined Novartis in 2015 as Director Corporate Strategy where he was responsible for leading group-wide strategic projects primarily in the innovation space. Prior to that, he was a Junior Partner with McKinsey & Company where he served clients in the Pharma and Healthcare space on a broad range of topics, including innovation, digital and productivity.

Thorsten holds a Diploma in Industrial Engineering from University of Karlsruhe in Germany and an MBA from MIT Sloan School of Management in Cambridge, U.S.
